PROGRAM REPORT 2014

 YouthVILLAGES®
The force for families

DEAR FRIENDS,

Youth Villages, our board members, staff, funding partners, donors and volunteers made a difference in the lives of 22,949 children in fiscal year 2014 – helping more children than ever before find success. More than 81 percent of the children we served continued to live successfully even two years after completing a Youth Villages program.

It was a successful year as we expanded services in many areas. We partnered with Oklahoma's Department of Human Services and the George Kaiser Family Foundation to help children and families. We also were able to help more young people in Tennessee. Tennessee Gov. Bill Haslam and the Department of Children's Services worked with us to offer our YVLifeSet program to all young people aging out of state custody in the state – a national first.

Our YVLifeSet program continues to show great results in helping young people exiting state custody at 18 find success as adults. In addition to the program's high success rates, the randomized study of the program is showing promise as well. Social science research firm MDRC released the implementation report for the randomized trial, saying the first results from the study point toward a valid evaluation of the program. We expect MDRC to release the first impact results from the study later this year; these will show the program's effectiveness as compared to usual services for former foster children in Tennessee.

In addition, the Center for the Study of Social Policy recognized our YVLifeSet program as one of 15 local, state and national youth- and family-serving initiatives making a critical difference in the lives of youth in foster care. Most exciting for the young people participating in the program, First Lady Michelle Obama and the GRAMMY Museum hosted 20 of them at the White House in 2014.

While we're proud of and grateful for these milestones and our partners who help us reach them, we know we still have much to do. Thousands of our country's most vulnerable children and youth still do not have access to life-changing programs like ours that we know produce lasting success. With your help, we continue to strive to change that.

With heartfelt gratitude,

D. Bryan Jordan, Chairman of the Board of Directors

TRUST

BETWEEN CHILDREN AND ADULTS IS ESSENTIAL

Michael was a handful to 13 former foster homes. His medical and behavior issues led to numerous disruptions and him constantly being sent home from school for acting out. He couldn't play with other children. But foster parents Rhonda and George Cox were a good fit. At their home, Michael learned coping skills for dealing with his frustration and began a positive medication regimen with the family's physician. They also worked with the school so everyone interacted with Michael consistently. When Michael came into the Cox home, he was in special education classes receiving speech therapy. Now he's not. The Cox family's love, support and hard work have helped Michael flourish as a member of the family.

LIVE LIFE NOW

NOT IN THE PAST

Hannah dreamed about being the first in her family to graduate high school and go to college. That dream was jeopardized when she suddenly found herself without money or a place to live. After learning about Youth Villages' YVLifeSet program, she applied and then became a YV Scholar, allowing her to receive extra support from Youth Villages provided she maintains academic and community service requirements.

"At times we had difficulty keeping her spirits up," Mindy, her YVLifeSet specialist, said. "She's a high achiever and needs guidance on what she's doing, to take a step back and say, 'Let's get back on track toward our goals.'"

Hannah entered the YVLifeSet program later than many, but she said it was the right time.

"I was more receptive to being helped than I would have been earlier," she said. "I was so broken and ready for help when Mindy came into the picture. I don't think I would've done that if it had been earlier."

CEREMONY AND RITUAL GIVE ORDER, STABILITY AND CONFIDENCE

Frances Robinson recently adopted Joshua, an 8-year-old who is demanding at times – but she describes him as a miracle. She was a foster parent to Josh, who was born with drugs in his system at 24 weeks and suffers from a severe lung disorder and cerebral palsy. When he came to Frances’ home he was being fed through a gastronomy tube and couldn’t stand or walk on his own. Today, Josh can walk short distances by himself and is transitioning to solid foods. He attends a special school with small class sizes and is working to communicate better.

“Families are so important,” Frances said. “Josh didn’t have that before, but now he has a place where he’s safe and he’s loved. That’s what all children deserve.”

SELF-CONTROL CAN BE TAUGHT

As a toddler, Max struggled to play with other children. When he first entered Youth Villages' Intercept intensive in-home program, he wouldn't sit still during sessions and had trouble interacting with others. He'd throw a tantrum – kicking, screaming, hitting, biting and throwing things – until he got his way. Through Intercept, Max experienced consistency at home and regular visits with his specialist. Max's mother, Gabriela, began communicating better and created a healthier home environment. Then Max's behavior began to change. He controls his impulses now and will stop and think before acting. He knows when to pull himself away and calm himself down. He's back in preschool and doing well.

MAX

RE-EDUCATION OF EMOTIONALLY DISTURBED YOUTH

A component of the intensive mental health treatment provided on Youth Villages' residential treatment campuses, the Re-ED therapy model includes a structured routine to help children settle into a regulated lifestyle with clearly set expectations and a system of rewards and consequences. Emphasizing accomplishments and competence-building activities, Re-ED reinforces positive behavior changes and allows children to build trusting relationships with their counselors, teachers and other adults.

YOUTH VILLAGES HELPS CHILDREN BY FOLLOWING THESE RE-ED PRINCIPLES:

- Live life now, not in the past.
- Trust between children and adults is essential.
- Be good at something; competence makes a difference.
- Time is an ally.
- Self-control can be taught.
- Intelligence can be taught.
- Feelings should be nurtured, shared spontaneously, controlled when necessary, expressed when too long repressed and shared with trusted others.
- The group is very important.
- Ceremony and ritual give order, stability and confidence.
- The body is the armature of the self.
- Communities are important.
- A child should know some joy in each day.

INTELLIGENCE CAN BE TAUGHT

When admitted to Youth Villages, Shawn wouldn't talk; he was extremely aggressive, had poor social skills and was unable to follow directions. At home, he would run away, once being found more than two miles from home. His interactions with other children and adults, even in play, were aggressive and irrational. His unpredictable and volatile behavior made him a focus of staff and therapists. Shawn's therapist, teachers, tutors, residential staff and mentor collaborated and set goals that challenged Shawn daily, even hourly, to communicate and learn appropriate ways to play with peers.

"Shawn went from an almost nonverbal, aggressive youth to one who made significant progress behaviorally, personally and at school," Youth Villages Therapist Jayson Rodriguez said. "Previously, the bar for his therapy was set really low. We challenged Shawn to do more, and he responded.

"He's the reason I come to work. It's awesome to see the progress he's made."

TIME IS AN ALLY

In less than 90 days, Chastity's stable life spiraled into chaos. Tonye, her niece she'd recently taken in, was an escalating struggle. Chastity quit her job and dropped her college classes, but even that didn't help her get control of Tonye.

"I was at the point where I was going to give her back just to protect my own child," Chastity said.

Further assessments of Tonye revealed she'd suffered neglect, physical and verbal abuse and was taken advantage of by family and community members. The family began Intercept® intensive in-home services with Family Intervention Specialist Amanda Williams.

"We had to start from scratch," Chastity said.

Tonye created a coping skills toolbox to maintain control of her emotions and responses. She learned to read. Chastity found that the traditional methods of discipline and structure weren't the best ways to work with a child who's been abused.

"Amanda was in tune with this family," Chastity said. "I thank God for her, and I'm blessed that she came to this house."
